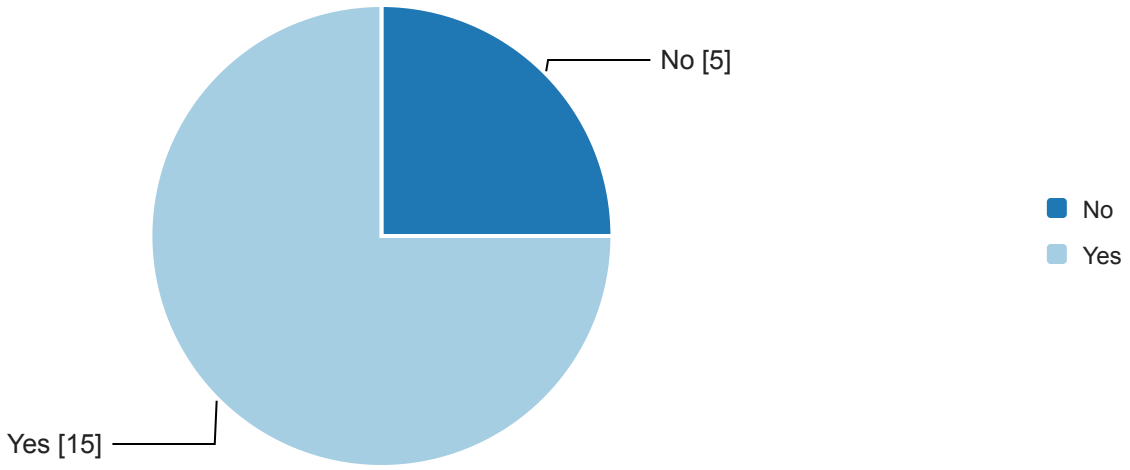
Lack of UCOM culture, Shannon has no regard for sending us to outside work hour events, manager is not organized and consistently leaves people unread both internally and externally. Really embarrassing when external partners have to call or email just me and ask what's going on

Culture of bullying, screaming, and control in The Success Center specifically

Lack of career advancement opportunities and no remote/hybrid option available for administrative assistant role

Q10 - Were you given the tools, resources and work environment to be successful here?



Q10 - If you answered "no" to the question above, what could have been improved to make it better?

If you answered "no" to the question above, what could have been improved to make it better?

My director supervisor did everything in her power to make our office a positive, collaborative, and supportive work environment. With her gone, I'm not comfortable staying in my position, as the rest of the leadership team engages in practices that are in conflict with my own values and expectations for a reasonable work-life balance. If I stay, I will not be able to pursue my doctorate, attend additional position-related trainings/professional development opportunities, or even take a lunch. It shouldn't be this way.

Tools and resources: generally yes. Work environment: absolutely not. I have shared some info in the answers below, and will be more specific in my in-person exit interview.

My role was the first of its kind, with responsibilities divided between the Division of Equity, Diversity, and Inclusion and University Relations. While I received personal support and encouragement from the leadership team, the absence of a clear directive made it challenging to feel like I was making a meaningful impact at Creighton. Much of my time was consumed by administrative tasks, managing relationships with concerned alumni, and proposing strategies that, unfortunately, were not implemented.

There was a complete lack of leadership on behalf of our Creative Director and Director of External Operations within the Athletics Department.

It's hard for me to pinpoint what exactly could have made the work environment better, however, I would primarily focus this on the complete and utter disregard of accountability within the office. Multiple times our director failed in work tasks, executed his job poorly, ad ultimately failed in ever aspect of his job description and I've noticed nothing being done to hold this individual accountable in any way. Further more causing frustration within myself and my colleagues.

This isn't the first instance of this either. Including myself, I have witnessed first-hand three talented and great people leave Creighton Athletics for this sole purpose. And to be completely honest, I firmly believe I won't be the last.

New leadership, very toxic environment in the department at the top.

If answering "very dissatisfied/dissatisfied/somewhat dissatisfied" in any of the categories in the question above, please share further information or suggestions for improvement.

as Heidi said when I asked about opening a position that Chuck had "it's out of the cards". No way to advance in current position Direct supervisor provided phenomenal annual reviews, requested advancement/promotion, salary increases, etc. Was told no several years in a row.

There were no opportunities for career advancement or promotion offered during my 5 years as an administrative assistant in the Law School. It is my understanding that my direct manager did ask the Dean if there was opportunity for advancement and he indicated there was not. Therefore, I looked outside the university.

To answer the questions of availability opportunities for carer development. On the surface level I would have to say no. When I picture my life staying at Creighton I imagine myself in the same position until I retire. In a culture with such a lack of accountability and leadership it is extremely impossible to have mentors or training. Most of the mentorship that I witnessed was done on my part with our younger and newer staff and interns. None was done by our Director. The majority of my career development came from opportunities outside of the scope of Creighton Athletics (Men's College World Series, NCAA Volleyball Final Four, The Master's, etc).

The recognition of performance question is a neutral answer for myself because I did feel like I was applauded for my work within the department. This happened primarily by people I didn't truly work with. However, I did feel recognition for my services once I announced my departure from the department. Throughout the last year I was the acting Creative Director with an Assistant's title and salary. No one seemed to notice this and when I voiced my opinions on the matter nothing was done to remove these duties and stressors from my plate. I firmly believe this is due to the lack of accountability on both parts. It was our Director of External's job to hold our Creative Director responsible, all while it was my responsibility to hold myself accountable while completing tasks that by definition fell under the "other duties as assigned" category in my job description. I was happy to help, but not in the scope of covering an entirety of a department during the complete breakdown of leadership and accountability from our director of upper administration.

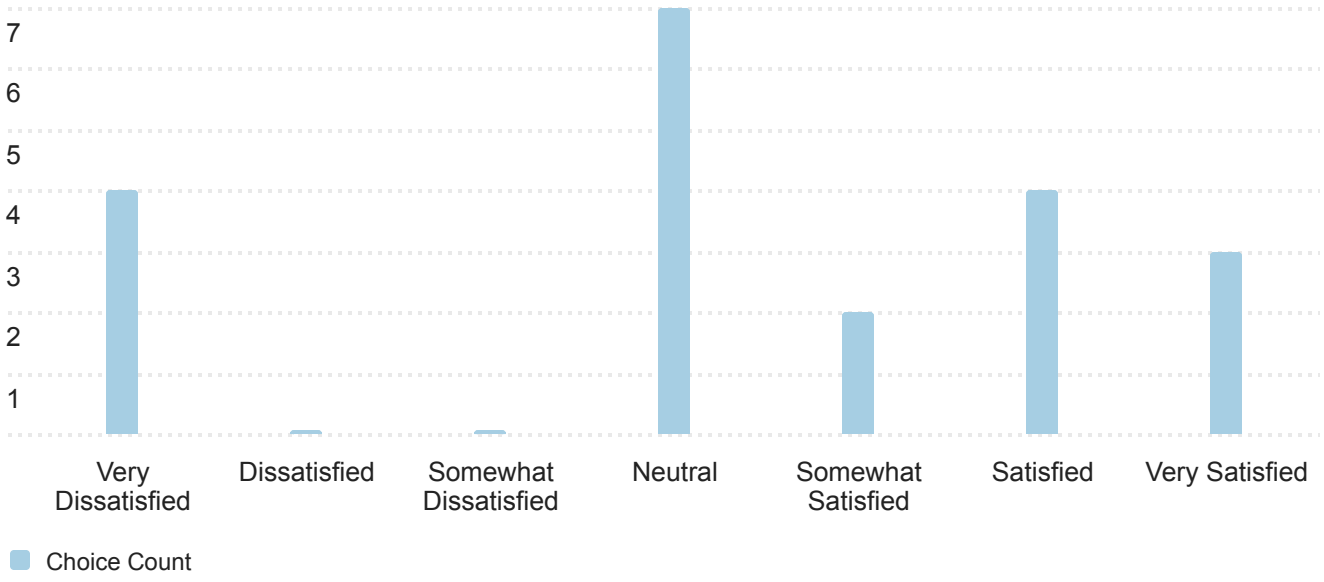
As I eluded to earlier, there was no room for promotional growth within the department and this was made known to me. It is easy for myself and some of my oblivious to claim my departure is solely for the stereotype of "less work for more money" however, I strongly encourage you to take a deeper look into our environment and find that my departure had nothing to do with a salary or workload.

In Career Services passed over two times.

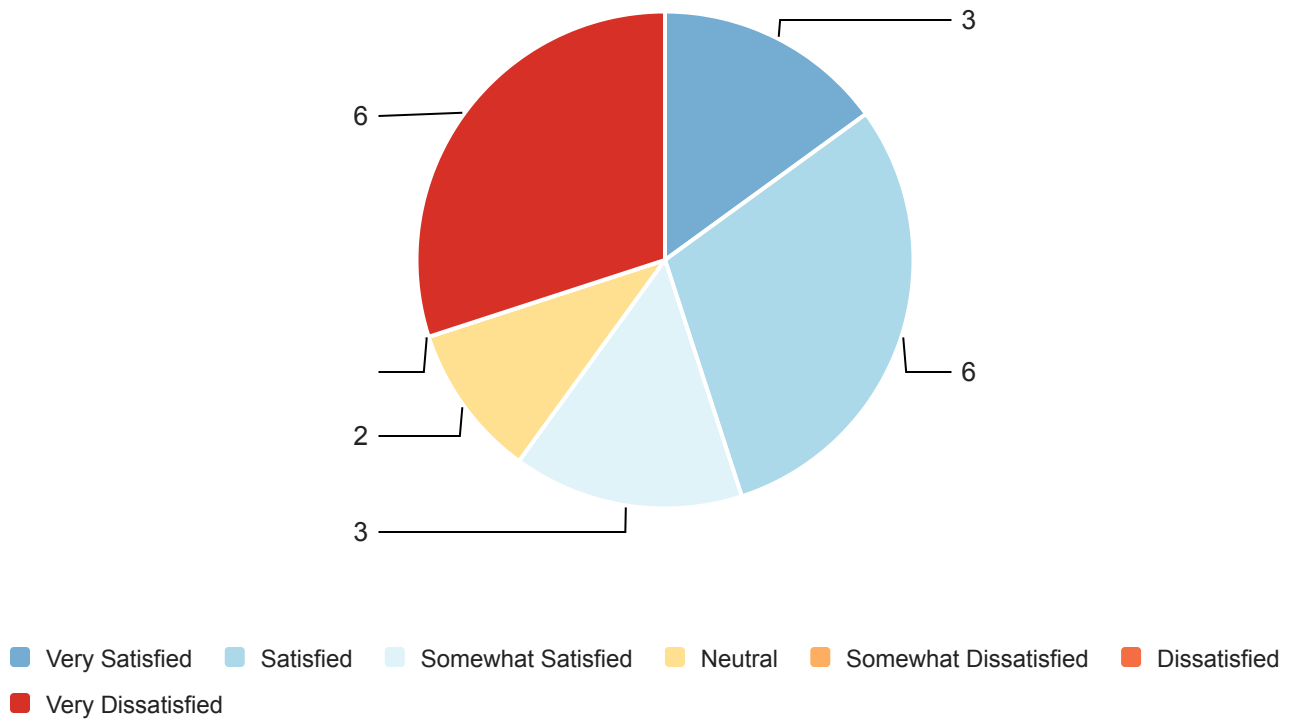
Not a solid career path

I very much hoped my next career opportunity would come at Creighton, but there didn't seem to be a position here at Creighton like the one I found at another higher education institution, plus the salary range was much better. I know there are many ways to recognize employees, and I think salary is definitely one. While I was not compensated lately for taking on an additional role, the experience I gained allowed me to tell a pretty compelling employment story and ultimately get the kind of job offer/salary I needed. I think it's a shame that I couldn't find a similar opportunity right here in the place where I stretched myself to help the organization.

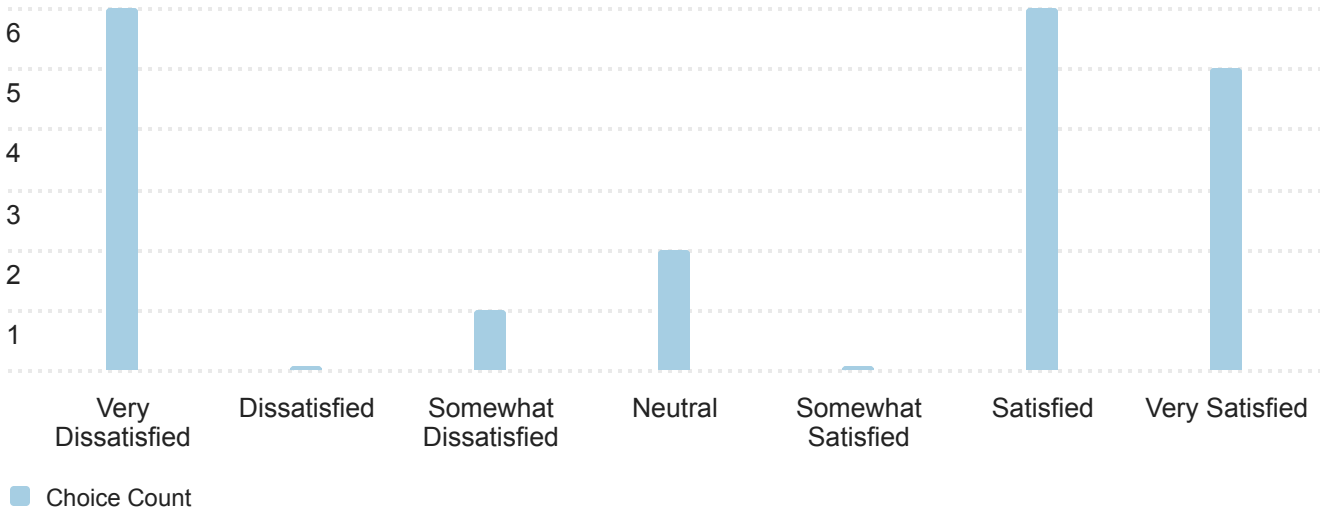
Q13_1 - Understands your career goals



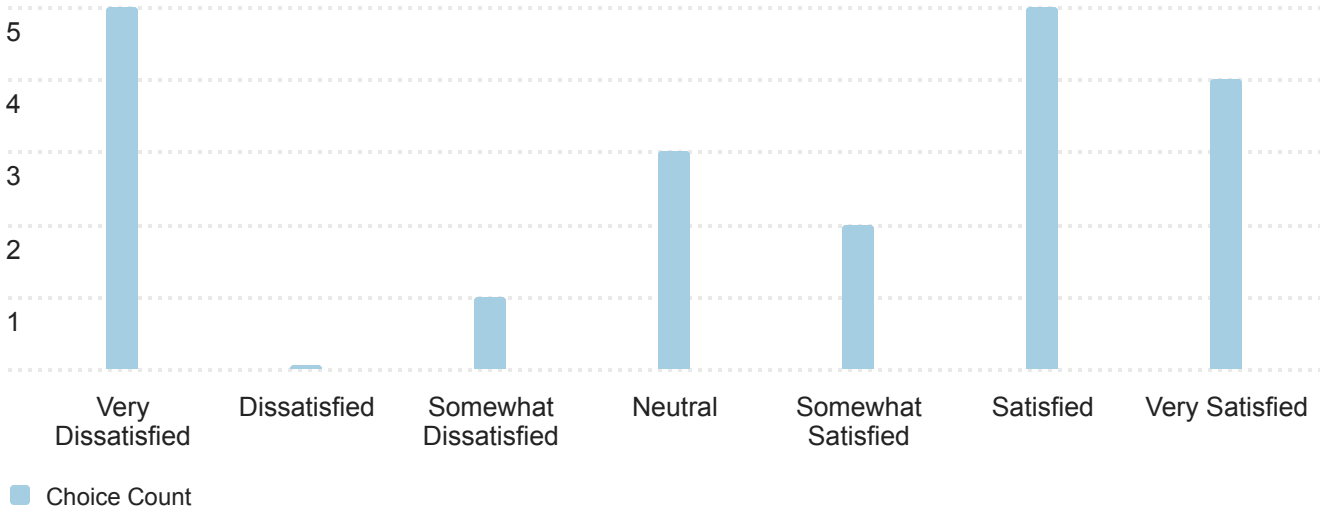
Q13 - 2 - Measurement and feedback of your performance



Q13_3 - Communicates openly and honestly



Q13_4 - Ability to work effectively with you



Q14 - If answering "very dissatisfied/dissatisfied/somewhat dissatisfied" in any of the categories in the question above, please share further information or suggestions for improvement.

Shannon has no time to actually know anyone on her team and people hold back when they are with her because there is a lack of trust and comfortability.

See the final question for an overview; I will share more details during my in-person interview.

Throughout my experiences working with and under our department's director I felt none of the above. Multiple instances were relayed to him and his superiors on this. We nearly had monthly meetings with one another where I practically begged him for assistance and leadership and nothing was reciprocated from him to alleviate this pressure. His is in total lack of accountability, leadership, organization, and communication which continued to be a frustration for me up until the moment of my departure. There was no explanation of my performance when it came to end of year reviews. We did not work well together solely because I personally feel our director was aware of the fact I was inherently performing his job responsibilities and he was uncomfortable to acknowledge it.

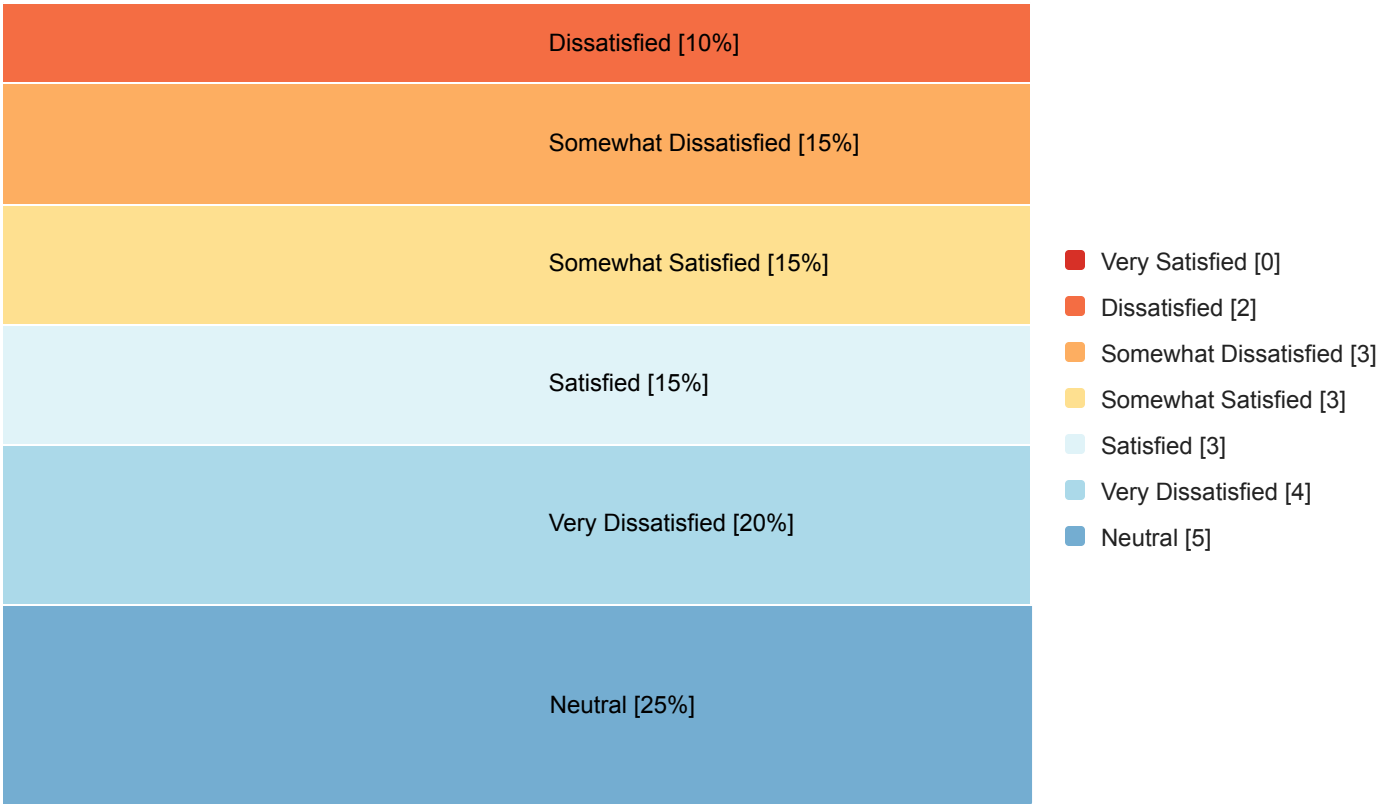
Communication, things did not get done before schol started this fall. BUCKO grants given to students, calendars , forms updated.
Doing her appointments. Helping her move into director office. Doing administratve assistant work since we did not have one.
I spent 40 hours ridding the office of files and papers. She told others that we did it. I had done it all.
Two hour working staff meetings rather than tell us what to do. Not trusting that we would do our work.
Not standing up for grant.
Letting other students use our space, when we are grant and could lose grant.
We put information into Access for the grant and then required to put into Connect.
Not fighting for our students and letting administration bend the rules so grant could lost.
Lost great staff because of lack of flexibilty and not being able to work from home. Yet administration can work fom home.

Only received criticism in my performance here at Creighton. Never received a kudos or good job.

The manager who hired me was abruptly removed from her position this past fiscal year with no notice for us as team members. The new manager (previous peer colleague) does not with the same interest in my work. The only memorable 1:1 conversation that I had was when I was pulled aside without warning for what I can only call a scolding. That whole shift left me unsettled.

While I wasn't looking for a new opportunity and was instead recruited into the role I have accepted, I am very much looking forward to leaving that new leadership structure behind.

Q15 - Rate your salary and pay (bonuses, raises, shift pay, etc)



Q16 - If answering "very dissatisfied/dissatisfied/somewhat dissatisfied" in any of the categories in the question above, please share further information or suggestions for improvement.

If I wasn't working 65 hours/week to get everything done, I might feel differently about my pay. As it is, I'm not earning enough to make the long hours worthwhile and it puts me well below market value. The incentives we have now only matter to me if I'm working 40 hours/week, so I could take advantage of them. As it is, I cannot take more than a long weekend in the summer, nothing during the academic year, and I do not have time for additional studies to work on a doctorate during the academic year. My workload is too heavy. We are understaffed and so I'm leaving before I burn out.

Continual roadblock to advancement from leadership - not direct supervisor

The pay for my role was very unsatisfactory. It was not a rate that was sustainable for me. It's not a livable wage and it did not reflect the amount of work I was responsible for in my role. The raise each year was minimal. I did discuss my pay with my supervisor, and it is my understanding that she did address this with the Dean, however he indicated there were no opportunities for advancement or additional pay at this time. Therefore, I had to look outside of the university for career advancement opportunities.

The set pay is so low that the little raises given each year never amount to a fair wage. The dental school doesn't go off experience or workload. Everyone gets paid the same even when they are hiring underqualified people. The underqualified new hires will be given the same pay or sometimes more and they can't do the job they were hired for, so everyone else has to pick up the slack for it.

There aren't opportunities for merit bonuses or raises based on performance. The starting salary was lower than the industry standard for the role at other employers. An opportunity could be for supervisors to distribute coupons to the bookstore or gift cards for small amounts to show appreciation when an employee demonstrations Creighton's core values and/or Ignatian principles.

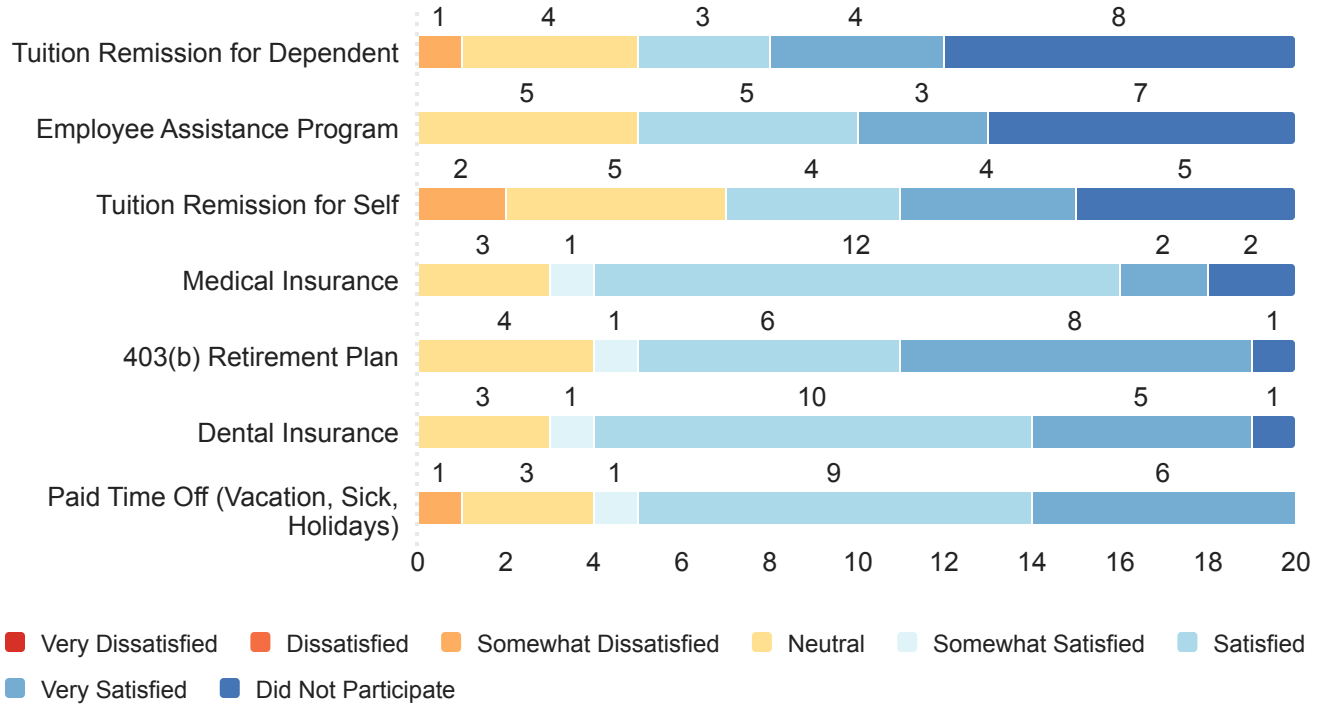
While I have been happy with my position at Creighton, the pay is unfortunately much lower than what is offered at other universities. I accepted a promotion from Coordinator to Assistant Director at UNO with nearly a 40% increase in pay. It was an opportunity I could not turn down.

The pay is just too low....even by Omaha standards. I would guess it could be hard to retain talent at the rates being offered.

This is hard for me because of my enduring love of the University (my alma mater). Please note that any comment here comes from a place of loving intent. That said, I don't think compensation matches the expectations of time and personal commitment that the University has for its employees. It is my impression that salaries are not competitive in the market. I am leaving for a similar position at an institution here in the state of Nebraska and will get a 33% increase in salary. I think this is a major issue for the University (unless it is just me who was in a position that was underpaid).

My salary just wasn't enough to cover what I needed it to as a newly single parent, and I was working a second job. My new position allows me to not also have to work part time.

Q17 - Please rate your benefits:



Q18 - Are there other incentives that the University should consider offering beyond the current benefit package or other suggestions for changes to the existing benefits offered? If so, please list them.

Many jobs now offer hybrid or remote work opportunities. I realize this is not feasible for all roles, but I do believe there are ways to incorporate this into the administrative roles in the company even if just during holiday or summer months.

Also, more discussion around career advancement for the administrative assistant role or other staff positions would be helpful so staff employees feel they have a career path to keep them at Creighton.

Although I'm not leaving specifically because of salary, money is always an issue, and I will make more money in a similar role at Metro Community College, and I will have greater flexibility, lower healthcare premiums, and similar educational benefits.

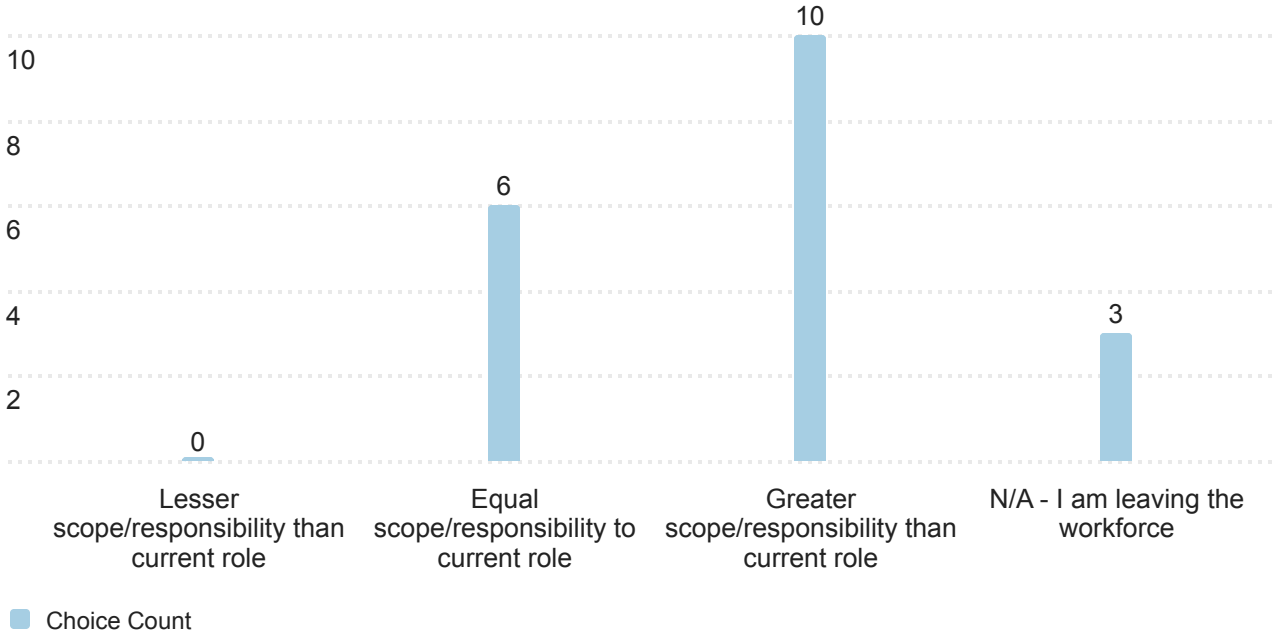
- Elective Vacation Time: ability to elect to pay for an additional week of PTO
- Free parking for staff/faculty (maybe have working a specific number of years with the University.)
- Wellness Reimbursement Program: a percent reimbursement for going to a gym more than x number of hours per month (receipt or transcript from the gym must be submitted.)

After 35 years, benefits better now. After my 16 year, i had to wait 5 years to get tuition remission.

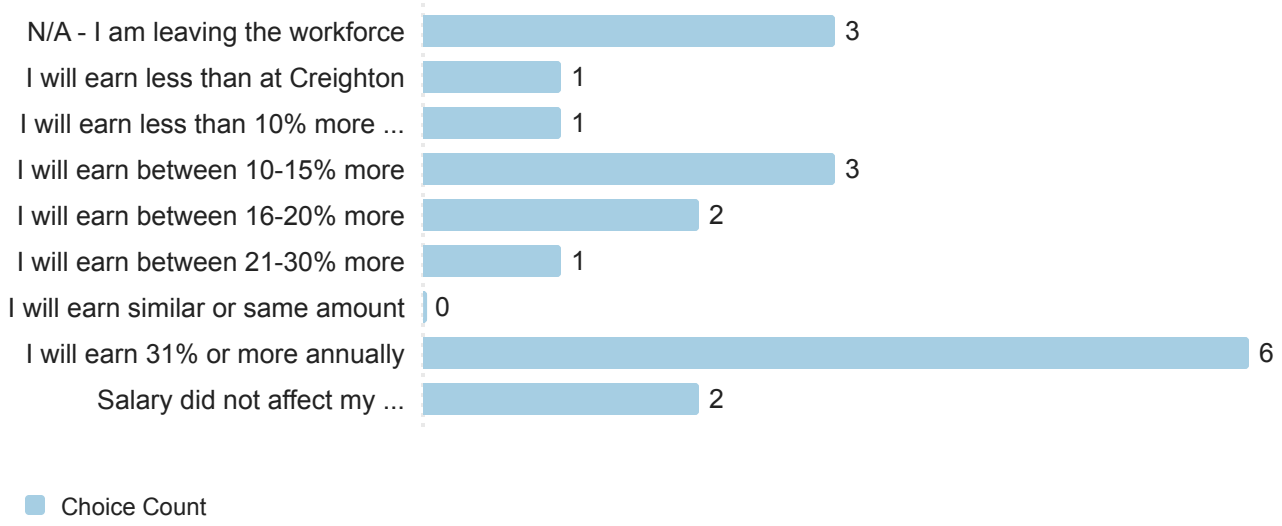
It would great if Coordinators could be offered a set amount of Dining Dollart each month. That would be a big boost in compensation for folks in that position and a very welcome benefit.

consider switching PTO to be one "bucket" and up the amount. Almost all companies I have worked for offer unlimited PTO without a negative outcome. I mostly just look for flexibility and PTO in companies/jobs.

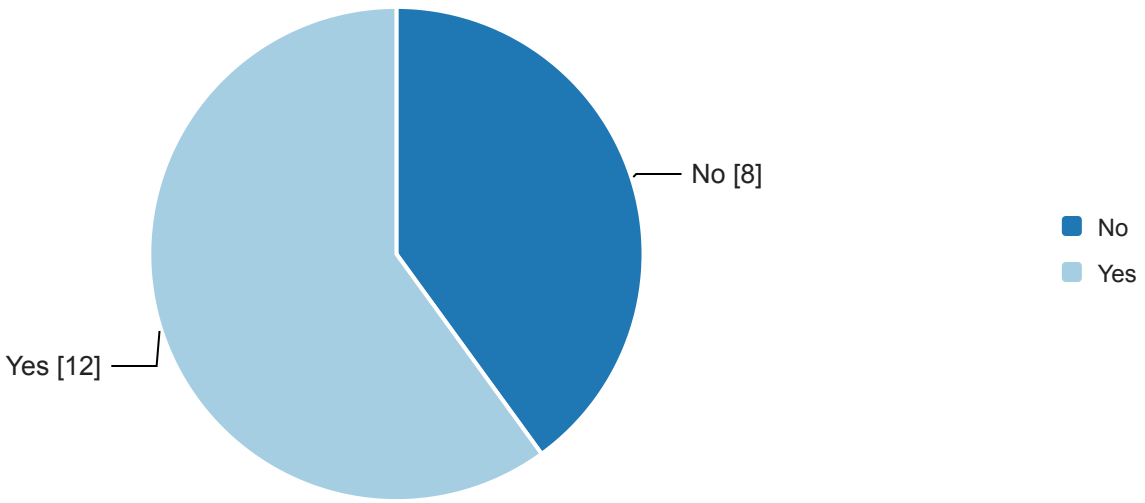
Q19 - The position you are leaving Creighton for is:



Q20 - How does your new salary compare with your salary at Creighton:



Q21 - Would you recommend Creighton as a good place to work?



Q22 - What was your favorite part about working here?

The photo/video team was great. Everyone outside of the directors and leadership in UCOM were great to work with. Theres a reason there is such a high turnover under the director level in UCOM

Helping students

This was my first time working in higher ed, so learning how a university works and being able to learn how Creighton works/will grow. I really enjoyed hearing about plans for the future via the town halls, it made me feel connected.

I like the atmosphere of a university and have always wanted to work at one.

My boss/direct supervisor.

My favorite part of any job that involves supporting students is always the students, but that's not specific to Creighton.

Creighton is a great place to work - this is dependent upon leadership in your area though. Things were wonderful for many years and have quickly become unhealthy.

I made good friends at Creighton.

The amazing students and colleagues.

Without a doubt, the mission. Creighton is home to some of the most dedicated, hardworking, and compassionate people I've had the privilege of knowing. Had there been more clarity and support for my role I would not have accepted an external position.

My fellow coworkers

The comradery, friendships, and relationships built with my team. I've made long lasting relationships in my short time with the University.

The best part of working at a university like Creighton is the relationships you build within the department. I came from a large university and athletics department and comparing that to Creighton it is incredible the relationships I was able to craft with people I would have never spoken with at a larger institution or department.

Working with students.

Anything but being apart of University Communications, the School of Dentistry had truly amazing people, very positive environment I felt safe in.

I enjoyed working with positive people in a collaborative environment. I had a very supportive supervisor that encouraged my professional growth.

Reference the above question. I might recommend someone new to the workforce, but the wages would be hard to support a family.

My favorite part of working at Creighton was working with my leader, Frannie. I can't say enough good things about her. She is supportive and knowledgeable. She respected my abilities and career history and allowed me to move forward accordingly. It was a pleasure to work with her.

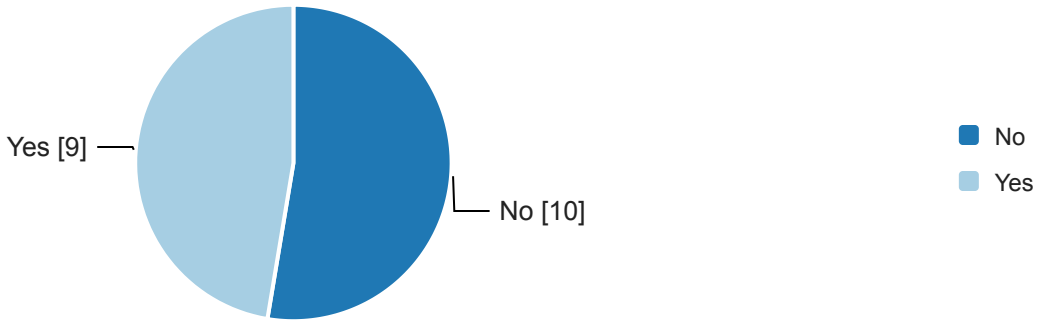
Amazing facilities and coworkers

The people I work with and the mission. Supporting student-athletes was my biggest joy.

People are great, the energy is great, folks are passionate and the mission is truly lived.

Creighton gave me the opportunity to do hands-on work with PC technology, both new and old, in a heterogeneous technology environment

Q23 - Has Creighton exemplified a caring, inclusive, and diverse culture? If not, in what ways could we improve? - Selected Choice



---Q23 - If not, in what ways could we improve?

Creighton as a whole but not UCOM. Where is Curas in UCOM?

Exemplified is a strong word, and while many people on this campus are caring, far fewer people consistently engage in inclusive practices in their words and actions throughout their daily interactions with others.

Healthcare for my wife - women's health - is a bit demeaning and antiquated. Many here speak DEI, campus diversity, etc. but my experience is that the ACTUAL hard conversations and true allyship is only spoken, not actually acted upon.

To clarify my answers regarding Creighton being a good place to work, I believe tuition remission is a great benefit, however since my children were not using this benefit the overall pay/benefits without tuition remission are not in line with what you can make for the same role outside of the university.

Therefore, I would recommend Creighton to someone who knew they would use the tuition remission benefit but not to someone who did not need that benefit.

The university as a whole, yes, the Division of Student Success, no.

I personally feel as the culture within the athletics department values and rewards superiors and doesn't reward lower workers in assistant or associate roles. This was shown to me as as assistant under a failing director. I will continue to harp on the idea of accountability from upper administration as the sole way to begin the shift of success within the department. If this isn't achieved, I firmly believe I won't be the final departure within the Creative Services Team of Creighton Athletics.

I have been caring to my students. I worry they will not be served in the same way. If employees leave every 4 months or year. Students will not have consistent services and counseling.

Very toxic department, very clicky with the higher-ups and verbally abusive to myself and my peers.

The college I worked with did exemplify that. The other groups I worked with not quite so much. I would say that they need to embrace how others work, even if it's different from them. We should work together and learn from eachother.

Caveat--I have powerful identities (straight, white, male) so it is hard for me to comment here.

Q24 - Please list any additional comments about your job and/or Creighton that you feel we should know. In what ways could we improve?

Please list any additional comments about your job and/or Creighton that you feel we should know. In what ways could we improve?

I beg you to look at why 30+ people have left UCOM for very similar reasons or bc of the same person. HR is here to protect the University and bc of the trends, the University is losing incredible people to keep 1 or 2 people in positions of power. That's cost the university a TON of money as well as passionate and talented individuals

I really enjoyed the NOVICE program for new employees and the Belong events (I attended soccer and basketball games)

I feel more time could be spent with staff regarding their career plans, promotions and advancement opportunities so that each employee feels they have not just a job but a career path at Creighton if they choose to stay. I think this is especially lacking for the administrative assistant roles.

The culture within Student Success has grown increasingly toxic over the last 2 years, and while the student retention rate is higher than ever, staff retention is dismal, and is directly related to the leadership of Wayne Young and Mary Ann Tietjen specifically. I am happy to share more about my experiences in my 1:1 exit interview, but here are some ongoing themes:

Unrealistic workload, always working at or above capacity and still being expected to take on additional tasks and projects without ever reducing load
Constantly shifting priorities
Expectation that salaried staff regularly work 50-55 hours a week (repeated often and put in writing)
Lack of transparency
Demanding and adversarial approach with campus partners that has lead to the deterioration of relationships within and outside Student Success
Ethically questionable strategies and policies
Misrepresentation of job/culture during interviews, which leads to almost immediate job dissatisfaction and frustration for new hires

I strongly recommend that Student Success senior leadership go through a thorough, structured 360° evaluation process, with feedback from Student Success staff and key campus partners. While feedback has been shared in the past—from both inside and outside the division (not to mention the the constant staff turnover that should sends a clear message), but it's not fully listened to or it's spun into a narrative that allows them to escape accountability. A formal 360° process would give them a clearer understanding of how their actions are affecting others and, hopefully, drive real changes to foster a more positive and collaborative work environment. Because right now, it's bad.

I would strongly discourage the creation of split roles. Employees are far more effective when they can dedicate their focus, time, and talent to one team or division, rather than being stretched between two. Trying to fulfill the expectations of multiple departments can lead to confusion, inefficiency, and ultimately less impactful results. To improve, I suggest ensuring that roles are clearly defined with focused responsibilities within a single team or division.

Encourage monthly 1:1s between supervisors and staff to ensure development and career goals are discussed and opportunities are aligned.

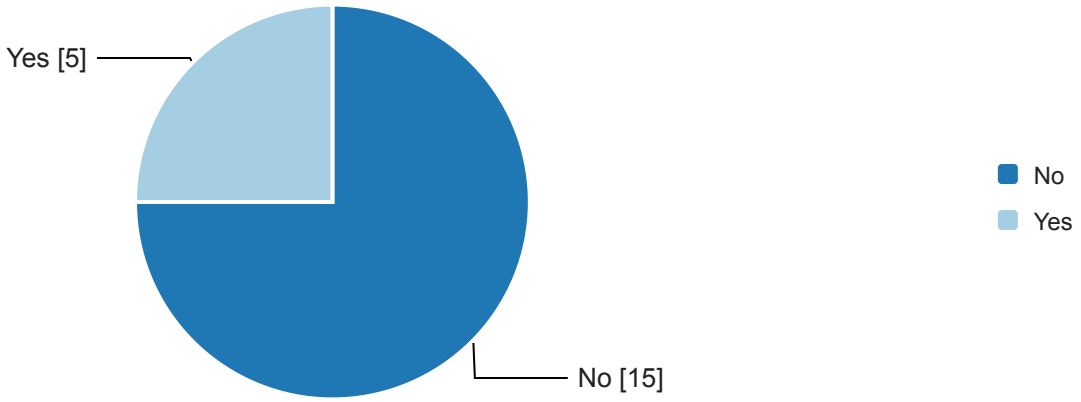
I cannot stress enough how grateful I am for the university and athletics department here at Creighton. As a newly graduated adult searching for jobs Creighton checked all my boxes. I am forever in debt to the individuals who brought me here and developed my career throughout my time with the department. I am thoroughly saddened by the downfall of this department, specifically in the creative services team. There are serious issues continuing to develop and they are continuing to be ignored on a daily basis solely because upper administration and leadership lacks the ability to have the "tough" conversations needed to find solutions. I will say it again and again, if this does not change, the Creative Services team will continue to be a revolving door filled with individuals frustrated with management, leadership, organization, and communication directed solely at the Director of Creative Services in the athletics department.

I am concern about retention office and data and numbers are important but not thinking of first generation and their concetns and needs.

I am solely leaving because this position was not set up for success and I was not treated as the Creighton values are stressed upon us. I am leaving solely for the following 3 people who caused emotional and mental distress the entire time I was at Creighton: Heidi Grunkmeyer, Kristen Paulmeyer, Frannie Schneider.

Working at Creighton has been a wonderful experience! The only reason I have chosen to move on is to increase my salary. As a single parent, I was offered an opportunity I could not turn down. I will always be grateful for my time at Creighton.

Q25 - Did you see or hear of any activity that caused you concern or that you would consider improper?*



Q26 - Please describe what you observed. If possible, please name anyone who may have information.

During the end of last FY, Shannon pre-paid Colin, a freelancer, a considerable sum to do photoshoots this FY year. No way that's legal. Shannon also told purchasing that something she bought last FY year got delivered to campus in time for the June 31 deadline but did not arrive until mid-late August. She also sends purchased items to her personal house address instead of Creighton bc it arrives faster rather than through university mail.

This example is not just me, many people in UCOM and outside of UCOM find it concerning that Shannon can not hire an ACD. Out of the 3 final interviews we've done, 2 have been highly attractive but Shannon can not give up the control of her position and likes to do everything herself even though she has no time.

I heard the vice provost of Student Success proudly claim that he told his students, through implication, that if they didn't attend Skutt Shutdown, they're losers. I've heard that same vice provost brag about choosing to sit in people's usual seats because he enjoys making them uncomfortable; I've had another staff member directly tell me that she's aware that his actions are purposeful and that it makes her uncomfortable. I've heard staff tell him that it makes them uncomfortable, which caused him to smile and talk more about how he does it.

I do not believe that someone who behaves this way shares my views regarding valuing the innate dignity of others. His immediate subordinates do not seem inclined to speak up against him when he engages in these types of actions.

I'm not sure if I can speak about things that I was told about, rather than what I experienced directly, so I have only a few examples to share. Regardless, with my direct supervisor and one of my coworkers leaving, both of whom have been tremendous positive supports in my daily work, I'm not hopeful for the direction that our office is going to take. And as an autistic & ADHD individual, I don't feel that this is an environment where I can flourish amongst like-minded professionals who value holistically supporting our students.

Conflicts of interest in data gathering - Temporary withdrawal students being allowed back before the policy states in order to bolster higher retention rates. I only know of one instance but have concerns that this was happening more often. Wayne Young wrote the policy, handles the re-enter process for those students and is in charge of reporting retention numbers.

This shouldn't be new information to the HR department at Creighton, however, I was directly involved in a report of harassment and inappropriate actions claim for my director on a multitude of instances. I wrote a full document for this and I am happy to speak about it more if and when it time comes. Instances of inappropriate or "Not Safe For Work" conversations being held. Some of these comments were being made in front of our student interns in a work setting which I find completely inappropriate and continuing to represent Creighton University and the Athletics Department in an ill manner. Micromanagement to the highest degree where I feel ill-equipped to do my job. Finally, things and tensions were so bad that I personally felt as if I was walking on egg shells every single day heading into the office.
